The Tacoma Gateway public artists, Sean Orlando and David Schulman, visited Tacoma in September and met with members of the community through two public open houses. Options are being looked at to address recent flooding issues at the site.

The Water Forest has been turned off for the season and consulting is underway to see what it will take to get the two broken towers up and running again and how to address the long-term viability of the artwork.

The quarterly TV show artTown launched and is available for viewing online and on TV Tacoma.

Amy McBride gave a presentation to the Economic Development Committee about the arts. It also included Elizabeth Conner's Green Flash, PC ACE's work, and Spaceworks Tacoma. Council requested a resolution regarding the Warhol flower on the Tacoma Dome.

The City's Neighborhood & Community Services department sent a letter to Lorig, the property owner of the graffiti garages, requesting a plan for addressing nuisance code issues happening in the garages. Lorig does not want to take on liability for the activity going on in the garages and has decided to stop allowing legal graffiti painting in the garages starting November 1.
